Large Audience Enjoyed Bennett Lecture Last Night

Despite the threatened weather which eventually broke into a downpour that pelted on the tent with such force to drown the speaker's voice an encouraging audience was in attendance last evening and Monessen's second annual Chautauqua got under way amid propitious circumstances The Ziegler-Howe Orchestral club appeared on the program at 7:30 sharp and rendered a musical prelude that made a decided impression and they were forced to continue their program as the result of encores by the audience.

William Rainey Bennett was the principle attraction of the evening and this old Chautauqua favorite commanded the attention of his audience from the time he appeared on the platform in his palm beach suit and raincoat until he bid them good night. Mr. Bennett, a jovial and even handsome faced product of Illinois, who admits that he left his native hearth as soon as he was able to shake the dust from under his feet. Exerting an immense amount of his own vitality, Bennett endeavored to drive home the facts that predestination, forordination and the Darwin theory are oosh, that man is what he makes himself with no roof but heaven for the heighth of his ideals and ambitions.

For woman's suffrage he had a kind word, declaring that woman should have the right to vote, not because they might make the world a cleaner place, but because they were entitled this equal right as an equal to man.

He rapped or praised everybody of prominence but mingled with all this virile language he seemed to have an inexhaustable fund of humorisms and little stories that kept the big crowd in constant laughter. With every statement he took off the sharpness of the attack with an illustration that tickled the listeners, yet impressed them with the truth of his assertions.

At the preachers he alternately poured fourth blame and praise. Christianity, he declared was never needed as at present. The spirit of peace has been shaken to the very foundations and the church in Europe has fallen like a stack of cards, at the sound of war. In this country, he maintained, lay the only hope of the world today, in the dream of world-wide peace and the brotherhood of man.

This morning the Boy Scouts met at 11 o'clock with Scout Master C. F. Hargrave. The Japanese Folk-Lore stories costumed, by Miss Jones were at 10:00 o'clock and Prof. Crook delivered a lecture this morning. This afternoon the Dunbar Singing Band will furnish the prelude and Grosvenor Dawe will deliver his lecture on "A Man's Duty to His Community." This evening at 8 o'clock the Dunbar Singing Band will give a musical entertainment

The program for Wednesday is as follows:

Two Men Killed On Railroad

Stanley Gilbert, aged 23 years, of Donora and an unidentified man were instantly killed shortly after midnight, when they were struck by a south bound freight train near Donora. Both bodies were terribly mangled and were picked up by members of a train crew and taken to Charleroi.

They were walking along the tracks and evidently became confused when the train approached. Gilbert's body was taken to the Rabe undertaking rooms at Donora A railroad man gave the undertaker the name of Baronnos Paulonas as that of the other dead man and a letter bearing the name of M Bernulis was found in his pocket

In Police Court

Eugene Payne was the first prisoner to face the burgess this morning disorderly. When arrested he was raising a disturbance in a local theatre. This morning at his hearing he ing, on a charge of being drunk and was fined $1.00 and costs or $3.00, which he paid.

Polley Litski, an old offender, was up again on the same charge, of being drunk and disorderly, this time Polley did not have any money, so he will work out a sentence of five days on the street.

Gus Andreson and Peter Tusant of Dutchtown were the next two prisoners to have their troubles ettled. The men evidently had some differences which they thought best to have settled by a free for all fight. They met on Donner avenue between Fifth and Sixth streets and proceeded to fight it out. However, the police thought they had something to say about the matter and arrested them, this morning the burgess discharged the prisoners and told them that in the future, if they had any affairs to adjust come to the law about it, as it would save them trouble.

John Gnipp of 1024 Morgan avenue yesterday afternoon decided to clean house and in doing so he threw a plate at Miss Lizzie Gust, who resides at the house cutting the lady's arm so badly that medical attention was required. This morning John was fined $3.00 and costs or $5.00 and informed that the doctor's bill would amount ot $5.00 making a total of $10.00. John paid his fine and departed grumbling.

Today at the Olympic—4 stars—King Baggot, Jane Gail, Charles Chaplin and Cleo Madison in different pictures. Each one of these stars worth the price of a 25c admision.

Prepare For Big Newspaper Outing

One of the largest crowds of the season will gather at Eldora park, Wednesday, August 4, the date of the Monongahela Valley Newspaper outing. The association includes all all towns from Fredericktown to Elizabeth and it is expected that each town will send a large delegation to the park on that day. The newspaper men and the park management will leave nothing undone towards making the day a memorable one and a good program has been arranged.

Races, ball throwing contests and a tug-of-war will be features of the afternoon while the dancing pavilion will be open both afternoon and evening. Coupons appearing in each issue of the Daily Independent and in all other newspapers of the valley entitle ladies and children to free rides on the merry-go-round and roller coaster and also free admission to the dancing pavillion.

Special street cars will carry the crowds to the park and there will also be special car service after the dance at night. Many other features are being arranged for the day and will be announced in the near future. The members of the association will be tendered a banquet by the park management in the evening.

WILLIAM ELY.

Mr William Ely, player of the xylophone and tympany drums in Sands' Premier Regimental Band, will appear on the Redpath-Brockway Chautauqua System during the coming season.

—Miss Elizabeth Vaughn of Reed avenue left today for a two weeks vacation to be spent with relatives and friends at Beaver Falls, New Castle and Butler.

Don't forget today that the Olympic has 4 great stars in 4 different pictures. Charles Chaplin, Cleo Madison, King Baggot and Jane Gail.

Little Girl Victim Of An Attack

One of the most brutal attacks ever reported in local police circles came to light yesterday morning when an employee of the gas company discovered little Katherine Atcheson, a 11 year old girl in an unconsicious condition tied securely to a table leg at the home of John Yectan at 1239 Walnut street.

The girl's back was covered with blood from cuts which she stated were caused by John Yectan, with who she made her home. Her condition was so serious that she was rushed to the Charleroi-Monessen hospital. Here she told a pitiful story of the brutal treatment accorded her at the hands of Yectan, who it is claimed is an uncle of the girl. It is said he beat her with a strap and tied her for days in the bed room with heavy chains about her limbs. When found by the gas man she was suffering great pain and stated that she had been held a prisnoer in the room since Sunday evening. Her assailant was arrested yesterady about noon but later released on heavy bail for a hearing which will be held this afternoon before Justice of the Peace Watkins.

Olympic Theatre Pictures Popular

The Management of the Olympic theatre is being complimented for the high grade serial pictures it is securing for local patrons. No other town outside of Pittsburgh can claim such programs as are presented at the Olympic. Included in the serials now running at the theatre are "The Broken Coin," "The New Exploits of Elaine," "Who Pays" and "The Diamond from the Sky." They are considered the best on the market and are found as the features in all the leading theatres in the large cities. Last night the audiences of the Olympic were given a real thrill during the picture of "The Broken Coin," when a young lady actress jumped a distance of thirty feet from one building to another and was caught by a man hanging from a window. This is only one incident of the thrilling scenes enacted during the course of the serials and the Monessen public should certainly congratulate the Olympic management for their enterprise in furnishing them with these pictures.

Today at the Olympic—4 stars, King Baggot in Automobile Races and Jane Gail. Charles Chaplin in his famous comedies and Cleo Madison in "The people of the Pit," in 2 reels.

"Boil All City Water" Warns Board of Health

Patrons of the Tri-Cities Water company who have registered complaints of the unjust rates being imposed upon them for what they thought was pure water, will no doubt be surprised to learn that in every drop of water they use there is approximately 7,020 bacteria. This was discovered as a result of a test made in the laboratories of the State located at Philadelphia.

During the past month several cases of typhoid fever were reported to the Board of Health and as a result seventeen samples of water were taken from the various wells about town and also a sample of the city water. The samples were sent to Philadelphia and when the result was made known it was found that with two exceptions the city water contained over 6,000 more bateria than any well in town.

The Board of Health held a special meeting last evening in the office of Secretary D. C. Farquhar and took prompt action in order to avoid an epidemic of fever. Large signs will be printed warning the people of the danger and notifying them to boil all water.

Representatives of the water company on learning of the result of the test hurried to this city and attempted to have the report changed by stating that the tests made by employees of the company showed different results. These tests were in all probability made at the filtration plant of the company at Charleroi.

The test of the water from the well at 461 Knox avenue showed but 40 bacteria per c. c. and the Jefferson school but 48 bacteria per c. c. Oth-other wells with good reports were located at 165 Third street, 213 Knox avenue and 141 Third street. The most dangerous well is located at 220 Knox avenue and contains 22,140 bacteria per c. c. and 11,340 bacteria coli per c. c, the latter being also known as typhoid germs. A well at 1045 Highland avenue contains 1,260 bacteria per c. c. and 420 bacteria coli or typhoid germs per c. c. These two wells will in all probability be closed up by the Board of Health and not allowed to be used in the future.

—John S. Sell, who is again seeking the nomination for County Controller on the Republican ticket was in town yesterday. He was accompanied by Phil K. Shaner.

Today at the Olympic—4 stars, King Baggot in Automobile Races and Jane Gail. Charles Chaplin in his famous comedies and Cleo Madison in "The people of the Pit," in 2 reels.

—Born to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Kunig of Donner avenue at the Presbyterian hospital at Pittsburgh Saturday morning, a nine pound baby girl. Both mother and child are getting along nicely while the proud father is all smiles.

Film Caught Fire

Quite a little excitement was caused at the Luna theatre last evening when about 125 feet of film caught fire filling the theatre with a dense smoke. The audience seeing the flames shoot from the booth at the front of the theatre made a rush for the exits and an alarm of fire was sounded but when the department arrived the fire had been extinguished with very little damage.

The belt on the machine broke allowing the film to rest for about ten seconds with the strong light striking it and this caused the fire which destroyed all the film not already in the cases. The operator held the lid on the box with a pair of pinchers and the fire was out in a very few seconds but the material of which the film is composed of, made a dense smoke which quickly filled the theatre causing the excitement. The damage was slight.

The Livable Town

Why are so many country towns going backward? During the past 10 years 650 towns in a middle western state have decreased in population The rural districts of another have lost 180,000 people. Practically every other middle western state has suffered in the same way, and it is believed that shortly every state east of the Rocky mountains will face this condition. At the same time every large city in these states has shown a remarkable growth in population. This indicates that the young people of the rural districts and smaller towns are dissatisfied with conditions, and gravitate to hope to find there. Uutil we make our small towns attractive we cannot the larger towns because of the pleasures and better living conditions they hope to hold the young people. There must be amusements for them. We must stop the continual nagging, the passage of narrow laws, the constant fretting of the older people who see in the pleasures of youth eternal damnation and the end of morality. Times change, and with them goes the narrowness of puritanism. In years gone by, dancing was condemned. Now dancing is recognized as a healthful pastime. It is encouraged, or should be. If the young people desire to dance some of the new dances, why not let them? The old people of today, if they dance at all, waltzed and two-steped, where their grandfathers and grandmothers danced square dances and the minuet. Simply because a fad is new, it is not necessarily immoral. Encourage the young people in all the harmless amusements of the day, regardless of what you did when young or what your parents taught you to do. This is a new generation we are trying to keep in the small towns, and youth demands its play. Be broad and liberal. Narrowness in teaching or by law can only result in disrespect for authority and law; in makihg harder the lives of those who don't think as we do or in driving them entirely out of the community and to those places where they can have some freedom of thought and action.

Thought Records

A tinfoil philosopher has said: "The more I see of men, the better I like dogs." As an example of logic, that is a good epigram, but there is more of cleverness in it than of love for humanity. Man is alright in himself; it is only when he reflects the thoughts of others that he falls to their level. No institution or group of men or association is greater than the individual. A religious or an irreligious man; a democrat or a republican, a prohibitionist or an anti-prohibitionist, a suffragist or an anti-suffragist is not great or evil because he is a religious man,a democrat, a prohibitionist or a suffragist. He is great only in that proportion as he is conscientiously honest in his convictions or evil in that proportion as he goes against them. Thus a man who believes in his soul that a principle is right, does wrong when he votes for a law that would oppose that principle. Also he does wrong by voting for a law which he intends later to help nullify. Think for yourself and do what you think is right. Thus a man becomes truly great. Do not record the thought of others. Thought is the light from heaven. Consideration of bodies of men makes us hard and narrow. Think for yourself and let others think for themselves. Don't be a thought record.

THE PRICE SHE PAYS.

There is hardly an American woman nowadays who can keep pace with the demands made upon her time and energy without paying the penalty of ill-health. It may be that dreadful backache, dragging pains, headaches, nervousness or the tortures of a displacement. It is the price she pays. To women in this condition Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound comes as a boon and a blessing. A simple remedy made from roots and herbs which brings glorious health to suffering women.

ELEVENTH STORY

PROLOGUE.

Sharp and clear above the crash of the orchestra and the murmured voices of the dancers, the revolver shot rang out. The music died in mid-air, its pulsating throbs ebbing away into a slow, pathetic wail that ended almost in a human sob. With pale faces and trembling limbs the dancers stopped where the music had left them; some with arms upraised; some with one foot in the air.

It was a tense moment; a moment fraught with pregnant portent.

All the wealth and society of the town was at the Van Lind residence that night Mrs. Van Lind, leader in her set and fashions devotee, was giving a ball for the relief of the Belgians. All the music had a patriotic ilit; all the guests carried tiny American flags, and the prettiest girl in town, dressed as Miss Columbia, was leading the dance. Joy reigned unconfined

And then the shot.

The sound seemed to come from a chamber to the right of the ballroom.

One, more bold than the rest, strode towards the door and threw aside the heavy hangings. And the tableau that was there revealed offered food for several hundred late supper discussions and gave the busy gossips of society many a dainty morsel.

The room was, strictly speaking, a den, richly furnished and not very large. Across a table in the center, when the curtain was so rudely brushed aside, sprawled the inert body of Edgar Clay, society leader, business man, good sport, hard drinker, and the husband of Isabel Clay, prettiest butterfly of them all Standing over him in a protecting attitude, the smoking revolver still in his hand, was the business partner and father-in-law, Russel Irwin. Hate gleamed from a pair of narrowed eyes; beady, steady eyes that never wavered from those of Horace Stone, attorney, who, pale as death, stared back at Irwin from across the table. At Stone's feet lay a shattered decanter, the contents of which ran over the rich rug in tiny rivulets, strongly suggesting blood to the excited minds of the eager spectators. But Stone was grasping his right hand with his left, and the trickle of red that oozed between his fingers told only too plainly where the bullet had found its mark.

"Oh, Edgar, Edgar are you dead?"

From the surge of figures at the door, one fair form detached itself and hurled its length across the limp and sagging body of Clay on the table. With trembling hands she raised his head, and with choking sobs planted a tearful kiss on his unresponsive lips. Anguish and relief and disgust struggled for the mastery of her features as she read the answer to her question in the kiss. Clay was not dead. He had yielded again to a habit that was stronger than himself.

"And may I ask the meaning of this ill-bred disturbance?"

Mrs. Van Lind was speaking and the tone was cold, incisive, uncompromising.

Irwin nodded grimly towards Stone. And those who watched him closely noted that he held his weapon in a firmer grip.

Haughtily the hostess turned her icy, questioning stare in the wounded man's direction.

For a moment he hesitated. Then his eyes wavered under the steady gaze of Irwin, and he answered sullenly:

"It was an accident."

Avoiding the glances of those who would have questioned him; ignoring the advances of those who offered sympathy, Stone elbowed his way through the excited throng at the den door and left the house. And so the incident was ended. But it is not with the incident so much, as with the happenings which lead up to it that our story has to do

I.

Folly was a constant guest at the home of Edgar Clay and his pretty wife, Isabelle Folly was the boon companion of this young society couple. Reared in luxury and knowing no restraint except that imposed by their own desires they had gone the pace that has but one ending; had traveled along the road that leads but to disaster—disaster that is the more complete the longer it is delayed. That they drifted farther and farther apart was but natural for Folly was always there to see that both persisted in the willful pursuit of individual enjoyment And so the Saturday morning on which our story opens, found them dangerously near to the parting of the ways

Clay, young, good looking, but with the marks of dissipation already showing on his otherwise boyish features, was in no mood for trifling that morning The cares of business weighed heavily upon him Junior member of the real estate firm of Irwin & Clay, he realized that the house of which his father-in-law, Russell Irwin, was head, faced financial ruin because of his extravagances and recklessness. The throbbing in his temples and the racking reminders of last night's wild time in no wise improved his temper, as he slowly picked at the breakfast that had been served in his room.

"Has his lordship a new crown this morning?" smiled Isabelle as she came into the chamber unannounced and almost unheard

With a slightly forced laugh, she pointed to the wet towel that he had bound around his aching head.

"Or is it some new style of headgear made fashionable by the war?" she persisted

Clay scowled at his pretty wife. He was in no mood for trifling.

"Can't you see that I have a headache?" he grumbled.

"Oh, these mornings after," she answered teasingly as she slowly approached and planted a light, quick kiss on his nearer cheek.

"Is his mightiness too cross this morning to grant his little wife one tiny favor?"

"Yes his mightiness is," he answered ungraciously, and Isabelle sagely, with the wisdom that is born of woman's intuition, decided to await a more favorable opportunity to press her request.

Clay was too absorbed in his own troubles; too much engrossed with his aching head to think clearly or he would have realized that Isabelle's "tiny favor" must have been an important one. No trivial matter would cause her to arise at that hour. The days when she took breakfast with her husband were long since past. She usually spent her mornings in bed, recovering from the fatigue of the previous night's session at auction bridge. For Isabelle's chief folly was the playing for high stakes at the home of Mrs. Cora Blake, an attractive widow of fifty.

Clay had frequently objected to his wife's visits to the Widow Blake's apartments.

Stories had come to Clay, stories of wild times at the Widow Blake's. Stories had come to him, too, of the fascinating widow's wild infatuation for Horace Stone, attorney and sharper, whose business dealings were often open to suspicion and whose escapades in which automobiles, chorus girls, wine suppers, stage doors and midnight revels were largely interspersed made the chief topics of conversation among the men about town.

Careful investigation, however, had failed to reveal anything objectionable in Stone's conduct while the play was on at Cora Blake's beautiful home.

As may have been guessed before this, Isabelle's early rising on this fateful Saturday morning had to do with the play at Mrs. Blake's. Luck had been against her once more.

She had reached the end of her resources. Her allowance for the next three months was pledged. Her jewels were gone. All that remained to her was the diamond engagement ring that Edgar had given her on the never-to-be-forgotten evening when she had blushingly promised to take him "for better or for worse."

"Can't You See That I Have a Headache," He Grunted.

Cowardice was not one of Isabelle's follies. "The sooner the better," she had murmured to herself, and after a careful toilet had gone resolutely to her husband's dressing room, there to put the whole sordid story before him, and ask for help once more.

But she had reckoned without the wet towel and the headache and the morning after grouch. And so as we have seen her mission had ended in failure.

A dejected little figure she sat in her husband's dressing room, keeping up her pretense of gayety, only when Clay happened to raise his eyes toward her—which was not often.

"A telephone for you, sir," said the butler, creating a welcome diversion, as he handed Clay the extension instrument

"Hello—yes, this is Clay. Oh, hello, Irwin. What's that you say? All right, I'll be right down."

His wife saw the look of anguish and despair that came into his face, as he hastily slammed up the receiver, finished his dressing and rushed from the house without giving her any explanation.

II.

Russell Irwin was early at the office that Saturday morning Things were bad in the real estate business and it was only by being on the job early and late that he managed to keep things going—managed to hold the firm of Irwin & Clay on top of the turbulent waters of failure that threatened to engulf them at any moment.

A rather distinguished man of fifty-five, as he sat at his desk in a dejected and listless attitude It was 10:45 and he was still alone; still awaiting the arrival of his son-in-law and business partner, whose support and help he needed more at this time than he had ever needed it before

And then came a blow from an unexpected quarter.

It was delivered in an ordinary envelope by a very ordinary messenger boy, and it was altogether a very plain, businesslike document. But its effect on the already discouraged business man could not have been worse if it had been dropped from above by a winged messenger of the gods of financial ruin:

Mr. Russell Irwin,
City.

Dear Sir—As Mr. Clay failed to apply for an extension last night, I have placed for collection, the note I hold against Irwin & Clay for a loan of $75,000 Out of the city today and Sunday You must settle Monday.

THOMAS NEAL.

Dazed and stunned, and seemingly bending under a weight of suddenly added years, Irwin groped angrily for the telephone and in an imperative tone called for his partner's house number.

"Hello, Clay, this you? Well, hurry down—while you have been dallying at home we have gone under—we're ruined—completely smashed."

This was the message that had startled Clay at his late breakfast,

Irwin wasted no time in preliminaries when Clay hurriedly entered the firm's luxuriously furnished private offices.

"Fine business," he shouted, angrily shoving the letter at his junior partner. "Fine business this, missing an appointment of such importance; neglecting to secure the extension of that note; fine business."

Clay, confused and ashamed, answered nothing.

"Oh, Edgar, Edgar, I trusted you," continued the other man. "My only folly has been that I placed any responsibility on you. And this is the result. Why didn't you get the extension on that note?"

"I forgot," began Clay in schoolboy fashion. "I forgot. I meant to attend to it. To tell you the truth I started for Neal's office, but I met some of the boys there and I—I—I, well, I made a night of it. I forgot business and everything else. I—well, you know my weakness, Russell."

"Yes, I know your weakness. I know, too, that you inherited it from your poor, dead father. Perhaps you are not entirely to blame. I should have known better than to have left so important a detail to you.

"I might have known what the result would be; I might have known. You were drunk and we are ruined."

Earnestly but without passion the two men entered into a discussion of ways and means.

So earnestly were they engaged in conversation that neither heard the entrance of Isabelle. Her manner was still nervous and the agitated state of her mind was betrayed, if in no other way, by the restless flash in her eye and the quick, sharp jerk of her words:

"I hope I'm not intruding, gentlemen."

They both started.

One look at Isabelle's frankly open countenance assured them that she had not overheard their discussion and both men breathed more easily.

"I came to get some money, Edgar."

"But your allowance, child?" interposed the father. "You've drawn it in advance now."

"I know, father, but I lost it. I played at Cora's—at Mrs. Blake's, and now, unless I can get some money at once, my name will be ruined. I simply must pay my gambling debts. They are debts of honor and must be met."

Perhaps if Isabelle had made her demand at a more opportune time; perhaps if Clay had been less harsh in his refusal, old King Folly might have been foiled; might have lost two promising victims, and what follows might never have been written.

"I can't give you a cent, Isabelle," he shouted, "and if you foolishly gamble again, I'll repudiate your debts."

"Very well, Edgar," she answered coldly, "what follows will be on your own head." And haughtily, majestically—like a queen of tragedy—she swept from the room, leaving the two men still more depressed to wrestle with their problem—a problem that seemed without answer. And there we too, will leave them for the present.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Record in Monessen is a Unique One

If the reader has a "bad back" or any kidney ills and is looking for an effective kidney medicine, better depend on the remedy endorsed by people you know. Doan's Kidney Pills have given great satisfaction in such cases. Monessen citizens testify to this. Here is a case of it:

H. R. Wilbur, 131 McKee avenue, Monessen, says: "I contracted a heavy cold which affected my kidneys. My back was sore and lame all the time and I had to have help to turn in bed. My whole body was like a board. I often had to have somebody dress me. Shooting pains darted through my body and I could not do my work. My body became bloated. The secretions were profuse in passage and contained sediment. I had dizzy spells and hot flashes, and I was miserable in every way. I doctored for years but didn't improve. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me and two boxes practically cured me. Now and then I take Doan's Kidney Pills as a tonic, and give them credit for keeping me well."

TODAY AT OLYMPIC an exceptional fine day. First "People of the Pit" in two reels, featuring Cleo Madison, one of Universals great stars. 2nd. "When Hearts are Trumps," featuring baby Earl. 3rd. King Baggot in "His New Automobile" with Jane Gail, world's great stars. 4th. One of Charles Chaplins fine comedies, every one knows now all about Chaplin. If you are out of humor or sick you need no doctor, Charles will do the work for you for only 10c. 5th. Pathe famous pictures in two reels. Think how many reels and how many stars we have today.

TOMORROW and every day this week is a banner day. The Exploits of Elaine in two reels. "The Prize Story" in 3 reels, featuring H. Myers and R. Theby, and one of the famous L-Ko comedies "The Child Needed a Mother."

THURSDAY of course the 11th chapter of "Who Pays" which picture is followed not only by the Monessen people, but by the best people of the entire valley, and 4 other Universal fine pictures.

FRIDAY we have pictures of the strongest and best companies of America, Imp's 2 reels, Victor's 1 reel, Nestor's 1 reel, comedy all under Universal company and Balboas great productions.

SATURDAY—Wonderful day. 1st. Bison's 2 reels, "The Toll of Sea Diving." 2nd. Powers, "The Stranger," 1 reel drama. 3rd. Joker, "Freaks" with Max Ashe and Gale Henry, every one knows what these two star comedians means, smashing the records everywhere. 4th. Animated Weekly with its daily and weekly news and the world's famous cartoonist Meyers, and one of Pathes great cartoon comedy. I, the manager of this theatre am wondering how this is possible, how can we handle such famous stars daily in Monessen, while in the large cities such as Pittsburg, Philadelphia, etc., only are handling either 4 reels daily or one subject of 5, 6, or 7 reels, then they are charging 15, 25 and 50 cents admission, with no better accommodations. than the small Monessen has.

But we must admit that partly we owe it to our good patrons when they become almost professors in the moving picture line and they know how to appreciate a good thing when they see it. I was astonished today, talking to our ticket seller with her fine ideals in every line, and upon my question, where did she get these ideas, the answer was, by attending the pictures daily. The people yet do not know what they are missing by not following closer the moving pictures, the Universal school in every line. Let us hope that you will do so in the future for a mutual benefit.
